ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

If we are lucky, each of us finds a mate. If we are very lucky, we find a soulmate. And if we are very, very lucky, we find a life partner.

I am very, very lucky.

Heidi Carolyn Kleinmaus is my wife, the mother of our incredible son, the managing partner of our company, Charrette LLC, and my manager for speaking activities. She is my muse. She continually challenges me and makes me a better person. From her, I have learned constancy and courage. I hope that you either have or will find someone who can make your life as rich as it can possibly be, as Heidi continues to do for me. “You already have this book in your head,” she told me. And she was right. As always.

Christian Kleinmaus Bolles is our son, and a phenomenally talented writer, editor, and researcher. He is a far better writer than I am. He fights passionately for what he believes in, and is a constant source of inspiration to me. From him, I have learned about authenticity.

Shea Michael Robin Star Shawnsen is my nephew. I decided from his birth that our lives would be deeply connected. From Shea, I continually learn patience and persistence.

Richard Nelson Bolles was my late father, an Episcopalian minister, early member of the brainiac group Mensa, relentless manufacturer of puns, and the world’s career counselor. I’ll tell part of his story later in the book. Parent, mentor, and collaborator, we had a marvelously complex and caring relationship. He gave me the building blocks of creativity, perpetual curiosity, a love of words, and an early understanding of the mechanics of human work. I refer to his enduring legacy frequently. Throughout the book, I could have referred to him as Dick Bolles. Or RNB. But “my father” feels right.

Janet Lorraine Price Bolles is my mother, a perpetual caregiver and quiet saint. She gave me the building blocks of empathy and service to others.

My brother Stephen and my sister Sharon have been my great companions in childhood and adulthood. I miss our brother Mark.

And now, to my friends.

John Hagel is the former co-chairman of Deloitte's Center for the Edge, and now heads Beyond Our Edge LLC. John is a longtime friend and mentor. I depend deeply on his breakthrough insights, from "unbundling" to "big shifts."

Eric Barnett is my longtime business partner and friend, world-class software architect, and one of the best guitar players in America. Party on, Garth.

Kathe Sweeney helped me grow my global voice by inviting me years ago to create courses for LinkedIn Learning, and then by collaborating as my editor for this book. She is my cheerleader.

Charlene Li gave me the entry point for this book. "Write it all," she said. "Just keep it short." That advice allowed me to know where to start.

Megan Lubowski provided invaluable support.

Thanks to friends who have contributed to my thinking on humans and work, including Chaim Guggenheim, Leila Toplic and Cyril Glockner, Vivienne Ming, Al Perlman, Rosalee Hardin and Kevin Jones, Mark Beam, Esther Wojcicki, David Kirkpatrick, Frances Bolles Haynes, Daniel Porot, Ross Martin, Phil Cousineau, James Fallows and Deb Fallows, Dirk Spiers, Valerie Buckingham, Will Weisman, Sean Watson, David Reese, Shel Israel, David Strom, Yossi Vardi, Chinedu Ocheru, Oshoke Pamela Abalu, Nick Smoot, Matt Dunne, Erin Dobson, Susan McPherson, Megan Beck and Alex Hillinger, Nicola Corzine, John Irons, Andrew Duncelman, Lindsey Kneuve, Vikrum Aiyer, Lorin Platto, Allegra Diggins, David Hornik, Jim Baller, Jeff Lundwall, Chris Shipley, Lisa Licht, Peter Sims, Virginia Hamilton, Dov Seidman, Pat Lencioni, Adam Grant, Markus Hunt, Tom Friedman, Flo Allen, and Ulysses. And to Laurie and Joe Rombi for the retreat time in Pacific Grove.

Referencing

Throughout the book, I use the single-person pronoun “they” a lot. My father first started doing this years ago in Parachute. He maintained that for centuries we have been willing to be incorrect about gender, so it’s about time we shifted instead to be unspecific as to gender. As so often, ahead of his time.

If I refer to someone by their first name, I know them.

As you’ll see, it is deeply important to me to give credit where credit is due. If I have used any of your thinking without attribution, or through misattribution, please accept my apologies. Correct me and send me the source so I can credit your work properly.
